MEAT INSPECTION LACKS AUTHORITY

FAILS TO COVER ONE-HALF OF
THE MEAT WHICH IS PRO-DUCED IN THE UNIT-ED STATES.

TAINTED GRADES DIVERTED

That half the meat eaten in the United States can be called uninspected and that a real and serious danger to the public exists as a result is one of the conclusions reached by Dr. A. D. Melvin, chief of the United States bureau of animal industry, in his annual report to the secretary of agriculture.

Inefficiency of the government inspection because of its lack of authority to reach business done entirely within a state is given as one of the causes, and Dr. Melvin points out the great need of supplementing the government inspection of meats with state and municipal inspections.

One result of the federal inspection is to cause the diversion of diseased and suspicious-looking animals to the uninspected establishments, where they can be slaughtered for the local markets, says the report.

"Many cities have an inspection service, but very few have an adequate force, and the inspection often consists of merely examining the meat as offered for sale in the markets, when it is usually impossible to detect disease, the evidence of which may have been removed with the viscera or organs," says Dr. Melvin.

"As a rule, sanitary conditions are very bad at uninspected slaughter houses, and in order to provide real protection against diseased or unwholesome meat a competent veterinary and sanitary inspection at the time of slaughter is essential, the report says.

Despite the shortcomings of the inspection, it has many advantages and is producing results which are increasing from year to year, Dr. Melvin shows in his report. With the new law a steady improvement in the sanitation of packing houses has been a considerable decrease in the amount of meat condemned in the inspection.

More than 36,000,000 animals were inspected at the time of their slaughter during the fiscal year were condemned in whole or in part. On reinspection more than 25,000,000 pounds of meat and meat products were condemned which had become unwholesome since inspection at the time of slaughter.

The inspection service had an appropriation of $3,000,000 to do business on during the year and spent 2,384,000.

TERRE HAUTE SCHOOL FIGHT

IS BROUGHT HERE ON CHANGE OF VENUE FROM GREEN COUNTY WHERE IT WAS TAKEN FROM VIGO.

ENJOINS SCHOOL BUILDING

This morning there was filed in the Putnam Circuit Court on change of venue the celebrated case of Edward E. Dix against the School City of Terre Haute and School Board. The case came from Greene County where it had been taken on change of venue from Vigo. The complaint and the transcripts are unusually voluminous and the case will very doubtless be long and hard fought.

The complaint alleges that the school board of Terre Haute prepared plans for a certain high school building and agreed to locate it in the south side of the city. Later on petition of some 6,000 citizens they agreed that it should go to the north side. One of the board withdrew through expiration of his term of office, and the new member, combining with one of the old members, by a resolution passed in the absence of the third member, reconsidered the resolution to place the school in the north side, and put it back on the south side. Later by a vote of two to three the board called for plans for a new building and for an addition to the present building. Later still, when the plans were received, bids were advertised for.

The complaint alleges that the new building, in order to best accommodate the prospective students should be built on the north side. It further alleges that the board has no right in law to construct an annex to the present building for the purpose of manual training. It alleges further that the plans call for a building that is not fire proof and is dangerous.

For all these reasons the plaintiff asks that board be restrained from accepting bids and proceeding with the work. A temporary order has been granted and the final hearing will be in the local court. O. B. Harris and McNutt and McNutt are the plaintiff's attorneys.

SECOND DAY OF INSTITUTE

GOOD SPEAKERS AND UNUSUAL INTEREST MANIFEST AT THE FARMERS' MEETING NOW
IN PROGRESS.

DR. HURTY GIVES ADVICE

Dr. Hurty's Lecture.

On Wednesday night Dr. Hurty, Secretary of the State Board of Health, spoke on the subject, "Health on the Farm." Dr. Hurty spoke along the line of farm sanitation. He declared that much of the annual sickness and death in farming communities could be prevented by proper care. Typhoid fever, tuberculosis, two of the most dreaded diseases could be prevented. Many deaths from accident, especially on railroads could be prevented. It is a most remarkable coincidence that at the very moment the speaker was discussing preventable accident Mr. Rule was meeting death at Limesdale. Dr. Hurty's talk was greatly appreciated.

The cold weather did not detract from the interest manifested in the Farmers' Institute now in progress at the Court House. This morning saw a goodly audience out for the first address, and the size of the audience grew throughout the forenoon.

On Wednesday afternoon the final addresses were given by Prof. Calvin, of Purdue University, by Dr. T. A. Sigler and F. C. Tilden. At two o'clock the audience divided, the ladies going to the county superintendent's room, where they were addressed by Prof. Calvin upon "The Human Machine and its Care." In the men's section, which remained in the assembly room, Dr. T. A. Sigler spoke upon "Tuberculosis." He discussed the several forms of tuberculosis as found in cattle, hogs and poultry. He described at length the tuberculin test in cattle. He declared that he expected as good results from the use of this test as had already been secured from a like test for glanders in horses. The test had practically freed the state of glanders. He predicted that unless tuberculosis was stamped out the time would soon come when buyers would require the farmers to wait for their money till after the government inspection that the buyer might deduct for any tubercular cattle or hogs. An animated discussion followed.

Later the two sections combined and F. C. Tilden spoke for a short time upon the subject "Some Experiments." He outlined briefly his experience with commercial fertilizers upon a small farm in the edge of Hendricks county. Considerable discussion followed and it is probable that place will be given on future programs for telling of experiments of this kind.

The devotional exercises were conducted this morning by the Rev. J. M. Rudy.

The first work of the session was to have been given by A. P. Burnside, but he was not present. Geo. Knauer, president of the institute, took up the work, and discussed the subject, "An Ear of Corn and How to Grow It." He discussed the typical seed ear, and declared that it should be in the shape of a cylinder, the grains broad and square, not pointed, and the broad deep grains continued to the tip of the ear and the butt also. It was not necessary that the tip be covered with kernels.

In raising seed corn he recommended the planting of an ear to a row and then the detasseling of every other row to prevent inbreeding. This gave vitality to the corn. Rev. Oscar Lane followed in the discussion and said some excellent things along the line of soil treatment for corn.

L. G. Wright of Putnamville, next spoke upon the Farmstead. Mr. Wright spoke upon the farm as a home as compared with the city. He pointed out the advantages of farm life, its freedom, its healthfulness, its idealism and contrasted them with the city life. He acknowledged that many farmers lives were poor and declared that this was due to the inability of the farmer to make his home correspond to the natural environment. We need better homes, an education that will make right living and not money getting the aim of the children, and then farm life will be one of the most enjoyable lives that may be lived.

In Mr. Burkheart, of Tipton, the next speaker, the institute found a treasure. Mr. Burkheart not only presented interesting facts, but he was an inspiration. His strong character, his witty remarks, his words of encouragement had power to aid every one in the audience. He declared that it was his motto "never to let another man be nicer than he in a business transaction." He raised a smile by declaring that "only a gentleman could properly feed a hog." He contrasted the girl and her lap dog with a farmer with a pig in his arms much to the disadvantage of the girl. And so the talk went.

Mr. Burkheart spoke on the subject: "Why I Feed My Grain." He gave results from his own experience. He declared that with hogs selling at four dollars and corn at forty cents, good feeding would get one dollar corn from the four cent hogs. Wheat and oats as well as corn could be profitably marketed through hogs, cattle or sheep. He believed, however, that to make a success, each farmer should know how to buy, how to feed, how to sell. These three things should be known first then success must come. He advised every farmer to get a long pencil, and to figure out every move on the farm. Be sure it pays and how much, and when a way of doing don't pay, try a new way. The talk was interesting, helpful and inspiring.

Afternoon.

Immediately after dinner, John McCabe spoke upon the subject, "The Golden Hoof." Mr. McCabe is a farmer of undoubted ability. He has the management of one of the largest farms in the county, comprising some nine hundred acres, and has shown himself an up-to-date farmer and a business man of excellent judgement.

Mr. McCabe's address was a plea for the sheep upon the farm. He declared that sheep were money makers, and that they well deserved the title "Golden Hoof," since they were capable of making gold for the owner. He spoke at length of the fine points of sheep raising.

MEETS DEATH UNDER ENGINE

THOMAS RULE, FARMER AND STOCK BUYER OF CLOVER-DALE IS KILLED AT LIME-
DALE BY FREIGHT
TRAIN.

ONE MAN SAW ACCIDENT

Between 7:30 and 8:00 o'clock on Wednesday night, Thomas Rule, one of the best known and one of the oldest residents of Cloverdale, met death under the wheels of a freight train at the crossing of the Vandallia and Monon tracks at Limesdale.

Mr. Rule had purchased a car load of stock near Cloverdale, had loaded it at that town for shipment to Indianapolis. At Limesdale the car was to be transferred to the Vandallia tracks. The Vandallia freight which was to take the car is due at Limesdale shortly after seven thirty. It was on time and made preparation to switch the car of stock to the Vandallia train.

It is supposed that Mr. Rule stepped off the car of stock and prepared to get aboard the caboose of the Vandallia train. He was evidently standing at the crossing of the two tracks and the engine, having been cut loose from the train, was backing down to get the car on the Monon. But one man saw the accident, the fireman of the engine, who was stading upon the tender. He believes that Mr. Rule saw the engine coming and attempted to step off and slipped. At any rate the engine struck the man, knocking him to one side of the track. Both feet were cut off and a deep gash was made in his head. It was from the effect of this blow upon the head that Mr. Rule died almost instantly.

Coroner Gillespie was notified and went to Limesdale and brought the body to Greencastle. Later in the night an undertaker from Cloverdale drove up and took the body to Cloverdale.

THE ROAD CASE ARGUMENT JAN. 11

SUPREME COURT HAS SET THE
TIME TO HEAR ORAL ARGU-MENTS IN THE GROVEL
ROAD CASE REHEAR-ING.

LAW IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

On Wednesday the Indiana Supreme Court set the gravel road case for oral argument January 11. In this case the judgment of the trial court declaring so much of the highway law as provides for "gravel roads by taxation" to be unconstitutional was reversed in November.

A month later a rehearing was granted. Judge Jordan filing a dissenting opinion, asserting that he still regarded the law as unconstitutional upon any construction. More than a dozen attorneys are employed in the cause, the decision of which may affect the value of gravel road bonds of large value which were sold to obtain money with which to build road improvements.

POLITICAL FREEDOM.

We suspect that the whole country is now deeply interested in the struggle going on within the Republican party in Washington, in which it is sought to deprive the senators and representatives of any power, or right, to represent their constituents, and to vest the entire governmental power in the leader of the Senate and the House. If the fight is rightly understood on the outside it is something like this. Speaker Cannon, Senator Aldrich and President Taft have the right to formulate the policies of the Republican party. Any one who disagrees with these policies, even though he so disagrees because of the desires of the constituency that elected him, is a traitor to the party and must at once forfeit all political rights, all patronage and the friendship of the administration, composed of Cannon, Aldrich and Taft. We believe that no more interesting and dangerous political theory has been advanced during the last quarter of a century. It means, if carried to its ultimate conclusion, that what few rights the people still have in congress are to be taken away. If the few Republicans who have the power and the courage to speak for the wishes of their constituents are to be deprived of this power, or at least humiliated, fought at home by their own party, then all political freedom is gone. It would seem that President Taft, more than any president in the last forty years, is in the grip of the "interests". It is without doubt these interests, working through Cannon and Aldrich that have been forced the administration to such a desperate measure as to refuse patronage to "insurgent Republicans." For it is a desperate matter. As one Republican said yesterday, it means the giving up of Indiana and Wisconsin as Republican states. These states will stand by their men rather than by the interests' political machine as seen in Taft, Aldrich and Cannon. If not, the Republicans of these states do not deserve anything better than that the mill stone of the interests be bound about their necks and they be thrown into the depths of servitude. We expect to see the decent Republicans of Indiana rally to Beveridge as never before. It is a question of whether government or the interest of party leaders is most important.

AT THE TURN OF THE ROAD

I made no secret of my errand, and I knew the landlord's eyes were glued to the back of my head, as, in the public room of the Royal Inn, I cleaned and loaded my pistols. For in truth was I desperate. Three weeks before, to the music of the dice box, had my last sovereign left me, and now, for a lack of that gold of mine that lay securely in London, my breeches and doublet were becoming much the worse for wear, while my whole person, which two months before had rubbed elbows with the gayest bloods in Whitehall, was becoming most outrageously cavernous. And all because a gouty king, moved to anger over a choice bit of sword-play, had seen fit to outlaw me.

Perchance, as has been claimed, the rogue was in his cups. I know not if 'twas so, for I gave it little thought. With his foul lips he was smirching the good name of a lady who might some day have taken mine, and almost as those who surrounded us could draw a breath, our swords had crossed, and his tongue was stilled forever. And then, not to mince the misfortunes that were mine, the king, with rare wit, put Sir John Myles and the runners on my track. Need I say, when once 'tis known we were each in the other's path of love a thorn, Sir John would be assiduous in his endeavors to bring me in, dead or alive?

Turning on my heel, my eyes, of a sudden, clashed with the troubled gaze of mine host, and then, as I clapped my pistols into their holsters, and took my cloak from the table, standing dull and heavy in the center of the room, his portly form came out of his chair, and he waddled toward me. "Tis better left undone, lad," quoth he. "Twill net thee but a visit to Tyburn Hill."

"What matter?" I cried pettishly. "My king saw fit to outlaw me, and if I take to the road, 'tis but living up to my name."

"Aye, but if 'tis death?"

"Then," said I, quite recklessly, "tis fate."

"Are there none who would grieve?" A little gasp came from my lips, and with a half-muttered oath, I made for the door.

"Stay," he persisted, "not even Mistress Cavandish?"

I turned.

"No," I answered slowly, and a note of sadness crept into my voice, "not now. Once, perchance, ere I brought her name to the lips of all London, but now—A gust of wind swept open the door, and turning my back on him, I stepped out into the night.

Wrapping my cloak about my body, I bent my head before the storm, and entered the forest-bound Newbury road. Weary and lonely at heart, the wildness of the night wind singing through the leafless trees, seemed but the wall of some kindred spirit, a-foot as was I, and when of a sudden I came upon a bowlder, large enough, of necessity, to shelter three men and sat at a point where the road turned abruptly to the right, there was little of thankfulness in my breast for this haven. And, moreover had it not been the spot from which I had elected to ply my trade, methinks I would have wandered on through the rain, indifferent to all things save the thoughts that filled my brain.

With my body pressed hard against the rock, I slipped a mask over my face, and turning my eager eyes Londonward, I waited. For, layhap, a matter of 20 minutes, I crouched there in the dark, wet and shivering with cold, and then, with a suddenness that caused me to stand upright, there came to my ears above the noise of the storm, the sound of advancing footsteps.

There were two of them, and as they stopped a scant foot in front of me, I crouched low to the ground again. And then of a sudden, something fine and dry, perchance the priming from my pistols, came into my nostrils with my breath, and in another moment I had awakened the echoes of the forest, with a truly non-sensuous sneeze.

The time for deception was past, and as I stood up, I heard a duet of startled oaths and the ominous click of drawn pistol triggers. Then, on a sudden, through the blackness loomed their forms, and I found myself staring at a couple of faces, masked as was mine, and at four barkers, held by four hands that were quivering and shaking—perchance with cold.

For a moment we stood as though posing for some dauber of canvas, and then the taller of the two broke into a nervous laugh.

"Fore God," he cried, "'tis in sorry straits we are when 'tis necessary for us to hold pistols at one another's heads. Come, sir, what say you? Shall we all go in together? 'We,' he continued, indicating his companion, a mere dwarf, with a wave of his hand, "are not here for pounds or peace."

"Well," said I at length, "if 'tis not money, what then?"

"Then—" he stopped and looked askance at me, while my hand crept to my side, to close round the butt-end of my pistol.

"Come," I cried sharply "out with it. Dost think I am dolt enough to throw in my fortunes with gentlemen whose mission is a secret and of whose very plans I know naught?"

Again my tall unknown laughed nervously.

"Faith," said he, ruefully, "if the truth were known, 'tis knight-errants rather than knights of the road we are. The lady—"

"The lady is a—" I ventured.

"Fair?" He anticipated my query, and bubbled over with confidential joy. "Sure I have yet to see a fairer one."

"And," I slipped in adroitly, "she loves you, and unrelenting father—"

With a great oath he interrupted me, while the smaller man, to whom, I found, Providence had denied the power of speech, slapped his knee in silent mirth.

"Fore God!" he cried, "dost think I'd be on the Newbury road tonight if she did?"

"You say," quoth I, picking up the thread of his story, "that the one she loves is outlawed?"

A surly nod was his answer.

"Then why fear him?"

"Because," he cried, and, 'twas as though he but mouthed the words to add firmness to my determination, "because she is now on her way to meet him with a pardon from the king."

"Swearing as lustily as might any highwayman, I took my place beside them, and as the coach, its two great lamps throwing a white light on the six straining horses and the tall trees at the wayside, came almost upon us, we three stepped out into the road, and with all the strength of our lungs bawled out that cry so oft heard on the king's highway:

"Stand and deliver!"

A dozen sleepy, frightened faces peeped out at us as the coach stopped short, but we waved them back with our pistols. Close at hand was the climax of this game of cross-purposes, and the blood ran dizzily in my veins and my fingers closed eagerly round the barrels of my weapons as fair Romeo stepped out from us and advanced to the coach, made a profound bow to the row of scared faces that once more lined the winds.

"Faith, gentlemen," quoth he, "'tis a lady rather than your purses I am after, and if Mistress Cavandish—"

I heard no more. As I write these lines I wonder I did not shatter the stillness of the night with some wild cry, but, albeit burning with rage, with the utmost precision I turned, and with my pistol-butt I dropped the speechless one, as his lips opened to give some guttural cry of alarm, and instead, gave out but a feeble groan.

Two flashes of fire stabbed the air, two bullets clipped past me, and I stood unharmed. For a moment he stood staring at me, and then, without more ado, as 'twas though there but a mere incident, he cast his pistols from him and drew his sword. Likewise did I, and in a moment we were at it.

Every nerve of my body tingled into new life as I gazed into his unmasked face, and as I felt the antagonistic bending and giving of his blade, a thrill of joy ran through me. For the hand that controlled that slip of steel belonged to none other than my newly come friend, Sir John Myles.

White with anger did I grow in the first few minutes of that maelstrom, and in my eagerness to reach him, all thought of skill left me, until of a sudden, his sword point ripped along my side, to chill every nerve as the cold steel touched my body.

Thenceforth I was more careful, and soon he was on the defensive. The look of derision died from his face as I followed him back and forth across the road, ever thrusting and hacking, and his eyes grew round in fear, as, bit by bit, his defense was beaten down. Wilder and wilder grew his parries, until, lifting his arm in la carte, he fumbled his blade, and the next instant I had three quarters of my own bilbo through him. For a moment he lurched stupidly on his feet before me, and then, with a sigh and a cough, he pitched forward on his face.

Straight to the coach I strode, and opening the door I stepped within.

"Mistress Cavandish—Lucy," I whispered.

"You want me, sir?"

"I want you," I cried passionately, and my hand went up to tear away the mask, "aye, Mistress Cavandish, 'tis you alone I want."

Slowly there came to her face a look of dumb surprise.

"Tom," she whispered eagerly, "'tis you, Tom?" Then as I nodded, she swayed a little on her feet, and ere I knew what I was doing I had placed my arm around her, and together, we sank into the seat.

She was a woman, and perforce first must she weep. For a matter of some minutes I left her to her passions and then, taking her hands from her face, I told her my story.

For awhile after I was finished she sat silent, staring straight before her. Then:

"Twice," said she softly, "have you risked your life for me. And now—"

"Now?" I took her hands in mine, and gazed full at the slender, wistful face she turned to me. "Now, sweet mistress, I offer it to you forever."

"'Tis a long time, Tom."

"Were it 'twice as long, 'twould never tire in your service. Come," I pleaded, "can not I have a little of your love?"

"Nay, Tom, because—"

"Not a little?"

"Nay—"

I started to move from her, and then did the smile on her lips become an open laugh.

"Why, Tom," she cried, "'tis because you have it all!"—William Heoliger.

A CRAZY AFFAIR.

By Stuart B. Stone.

It was in front of the great, red-brick, wall-inclosed building that Clayton, searching for Colonel Palmer's country home, encountered the prettiest girl he had seen in his young life. She sidled away from him and it seemed to Clayton that she smiled. In quick, irresistible impulse he bounded to her side. Then it was that she shrank back, with a look of pretty alarm, and said, coaxingly, as if pleading with a spoiled child:

"There, now—be a good boy and go inside!"

"Go inside?" repeated Bob Clayton, puzzled. Then, glancing up, he saw the words, "Central Asylum for the Insane" over the big wagon gate.

"Oh!" he murmured, his heart sinking at the discovery. "So you belong inside. You're one of 'em!"

She took half a step from him, glancing cautiously back. "No—that is, yes," she answered, hesitatingly. "I'm one of them, of course. But you'd better go in—maybe they'll have plum pudding for supper, or something else very nice."

"Poor girl!" murmured Clayton, touched at the sight of unbalancing loveliness. "You see, my automobile's broken down," he added aloud, "I have to get it fixed before I can go on."

"Yes—yes," she answered, "you'd better get inside first, though. They fix automobiles in there—it's an auto factory."

"It isn't," corrected Clayton; then reflecting, "that is, it is, of course."

"Better go in," urged the girl again. "They'll just have time to fix your machine before supper."

Then, eyeing him carefully, she started down the road. Clayton, aroused to her defencelessness, unprotected wandering, started after her.

Her only answer was shriek after shriek, and Clayton, greatly alarmed for her, raced madly on, finally overtaking the girl. She drew back frightened at his approach, but became calmer as he spoke in soothing tones.

"Come—let's go to the nice auto factory. I'll take you, and maybe we can find a big balloon or a pretty air-ship!"

She yielded readily to his coaxing. "Will you go, too?" she asked in her beautiful, simple way, "if I go along?"

"Yes," assented Clayton. "Come on."

Hand in hand, each eyeing the other, like bashful school children, they retraced their steps up the dusty road. At the big wagon gate the girl drew back.

"Now," she said, "you go in. It won't be necessary for me to go any farther."

"Oh, yes," persisted Clayton. "Come on—before the plum pudding is all gone."

Still hand in hand they sought the superintendent's office. To Clayton's nervous knock a cheery voice called, "Come in!" To the rosy, rotund man within, Clayton winked and whispered, "I've brought in one of your patients. I saw her wandering aimlessly outside and she attempted to escape."

The man stared at him, open-mouthed. "What do you mean?" he gasped.

Then the girl communicated with the superintendent, not so low but that Clayton heard. "I found this poor man strolling outside in the road. He chased me for a hundred yards."

The superintendent seemed threatened with apoplexy. "You're not—he's not!" he began.

Then a door opened and a very familiar figure entered.

"Why, Clayton," explained the newcomer. "You here? Allow me to introduce my daughter, Miss Lynda Palmer, and my friend and neighbor, Captain Hyatt, who is superintendent here. They're looking for you at the house."

"Miss Palmer," bowed Clayton, reddening, while the superintendent sniggered.

"Mr. Clayton," acknowledged the rosy-cheeked girl. Then, in an undertone of delicious confidence, she added: "We'll go have the auto fixed now—before the nice plum pudding is served."

There are 1,990 Young Men's Christian associations in Germany—only 1,039 in America; yet, where the German associations have but 117,000 members, the American have 446,000. And German association property holdings have a value of $2,400,000, contrasted with a value of $40,000,000 in America.

Belfast is well supplied with Presbyterian churches and linen mills, but hasn't a single cigar factory. The Belfast men used to smoke pipes exclusively; now a good many of them have acquired the cigaret habit. Ireland's one lone, lone cigar factory is in Dublin.

The wealth of the United States in 1850 was $7,000,000,000, speaking in round terms; in 1860, $16,000,000,000; in 1870, $30,000,000,000; in 1880, $45,000,000,000; in 1890, $85,000,000,000; in 1900, $185,000,000,000, and in 1904, $107,000,000,000.

POULTRY

POULTRY ON THE SMALL FARM.

Prove a Profitable Investment With Little Initial Outlay.

It should be comparatively easy to raise poultry successfully on the average farm, and to make it pay. Most fowls are natural foragers and scavengers, and much is utilized by them that otherwise would almost go to waste. The element of expense is also reduced to a minimum. On the farm hens are a side line, filling an important place, yet not making up much in the way of investment.

To achieve good results requires care and vigilance. The lowest cost compatible with satisfactory results should be aimed at. If you live on a small farm, your flock cannot have the same free range that the flock raised on a large farm has. You provide the roughest buildings and the largest yards permissible under limited circumstances. If you grow your own grain, the food question is simplified. Oats, corn and wheat are the essentials in feeding. Buckwheat, barley and various seeds and grains furnish a variety. Green food and a sod run offer many advantages to the fowls in summer. The garden can be made to co-operate with your poultry business. Chickens are fond of cabbage, Brussels sprouts, kale and vegetables like over ripe tomatoes, cucumbers, and peas when past season.

Take care that the poultry yard is kept clear of rubbish that would be foul to it.

Supply the scratching shed with light litter of straw and corn husks. This makes it more agreeable to the flock. It is a good plan to make the hens work, at times, while getting their food. Ears of corn chopped into small sections will give them plenty of exercise in pecking off the grains.

Feed your poultry whatever is edible that cannot be used on the table, and see that all waste and litter from the garden ultimately finds its way to the compost pile.

Top Working Pecans.

Interest in the pecan industry is steadily increasing in the South, where its cultivation is carried to the highest point. In the illustration is shown the method of budding and grafting, the success of which depends upon the size and age of the tree. If the tree is not in good shape for working; i. e., if no branches of desirable size and age are found in convenient place, the tree is trimmed to a pollard, cutting the main branches back to stubs, and when shoots have started from these, they are grafted or budded. In about six months from the time the adventitious buds have started, under average conditions, buds or grafts are inserted.

1. Dormant buds inserted in sprouts. 2. Branches cut back and cleft grafted.

Blood and Egg Production.

Fresh blood from the slaughter house is well adapted to egg production. It can be given with advantage to chicks as well as fowls and is used in several different ways, says Indiana Farmer. First, by mixing one pound of blood with three pounds of mixed ground grain and the whole mixture cooked as bread. Nothing is superior to it, not excepting meat. Second, if the mixture or blood is put in a bag and boiled it makes a food that not only takes the place of meat but it is better for the purpose. As the blood at some slaughter houses is usually wasted, no difficulty should be found in procuring it. The blood will keep any length of time in winter, but if not cold weather should any portion remain after feeding the hens it may be added to the compost heap where it will still be valuable as one of the best nitrogenous fertilizers that can be used.

Exercise for Fowls.

There is no doubt that exercise is very beneficial to fowls. Among humans the lack of exercise combined with high feeding causes most troublesome diseases, such as dropsy. The same laws govern the animal world. There are several things that exercise does. One of these is, it prevents the birds becoming too fat, which in turn destroys their usefulness. No matter how much a bird eats, if it exercises it will keep the fat from accumulating, as the muscular exertion causes the lungs to work excessively, and in doing this they burn up a large amount of carbon, which comes from the food. Being burned up in this way, it does not accumulate on the body and around the intestines in the form of fat.

OUR CROP OF NAVAL STORES.

We Lead the World in Production of Rosin and Turpentine.

Rosin and turpentine known technically as naval stores from the fact that for many years their principal uses were maritime are produced from two species of Southern pine, the long leaf and the Cuban, but it is quite probable that a number of other species will be employed within the next twenty-five years.

The crop of naval stores including four and a quarter million pounds of rosin and sixteen and a quarter million casks of spirits of turpentine, has an approximate annual value to those engaged in it of at least thirty million dollars.

For how many centuries commercial use has been made of the sap of the pine cannot be determined with any degree of assurance but according to the National Magazine the custom was general in south France at the time of the invasion of England by the Spanish Armada.

For many years the industry was confined to the south of France and Austria where it still flourishes on a small scale and it was not until a hundred years ago that intelligent effort was made to establish it on this continent.

For fifty years or so the Carolinas and Virginia were the chief turpentine producing States but with the opening up of the pine forests of Georgia the scene of operations was gradually shifted southward until before very long Georgia had become the center of the industry. At the present time Florida is in the lead, with Georgia and Alabama a close second and third. The depletion of Florida's forests, however, is gradually extending the turpentine area westward, and it is quite possible in twenty-five years time Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas will be in the lead.

Catching Thieves By Machine.

The cleptograph as may be inferred from its name is an apparatus for the recording of theft which automatically photographs those who break into office or house and accurately registers the hour of their visit.

The room to be protected by the cleptograph contains a system of wires and contacts that are properly distributed over the windows, doors, safes, etc. being connected with all objects of value.

As soon as a stranger penetrates the room a photographic camera, under the action of some contact, involuntarily and unconsciously touched by the person, will direct itself automatically toward the contact, that is toward the thief, and after having opened the objective shutter, will ignite the magnesium powder intended to supply the flashlight and again close the objective after the view has been taken then exchange the film, get a new portion of powder ready and register the exact hour.

The whole of these divers operations is completed in less time than is required to describe it, the apparatus being immediately ready for taking another view, as soon as the intruder touches some other contact, and so on. Like an invisible detective, the cleptograph thus follows any motions of the thief, in order to prepare a set of authentic and irrefutable documents, to assist the police in their search for the criminal.

The current required for working the apparatus is either half of that of an ordinary battery or—after due reduction through proper resistances—the current derived from the electric mains. Being inclosed in a box entirely hidden from the burglar the cleptograph is not possibly harmed by the latter—Technical World Magazine.

Turtle Worship.

At a place called Kotron on the Freaca Ivory Coast the natives believe that to eat or destroy a turtle would mean death to the guilty one or sickness among the family. The French men, of whom there are plenty, declare that years ago a man went to sea fishing. In the night his canoe was thrown upon the beach empty. Three days afterward a turtle came ashore at the same place with the man on its back alive and well. Since that time they have never eaten or destroyed one of that species, although they enjoy other species.

If one happens now to be washed ashore there is a great commotion in the town. First the women sit down and start singing and beating sticks, next a small piece of white cloth (color might be white) is placed on the turtle's back. Food is then prepared and placed on the cloth, generally plantains rice and palm oil. Then amid a lot more singing, dancing and antics of the fetch people it is carried back into the sea and goes on its way rejoicing.—London Globe.

Royal Births Rare in Scotland.

Among all their palaces and castles it is Balmoral that the royal family have always looked upon as their home. Around it cluster the most pleasing recollections of their childhood and early manhood and womanhood. It was there that the present Queen of Spain and her brother Maurice were born. It is an interesting fact to remember that until the Queen of Spain was born there had not been a royal birth in Scotland for nearly 300 years—not in fact since Charles I. was born at Dunfermline in 1600.

PROFESSOR JOHNSON TALKS INTERGLASS BASKETBALL

ADDRESSES Y. M. C. A. AND THE PRESS CLUB JOINT MEETING IN PLATO HALL.

JOURNALISM AS A LIFE-WORK

Defends Newspaper Men—Rare Wit and Humor.

"Journalism as a Life-Work," is a topic of great personal interest to a large number of DePauw students, and the talk on that subject which Professor Fred B. Johnson, head of the department of Journalism in Indiana University, gave before a joint meeting of the Y. M. C. A. and the Press Club last night, proved to be one of the best of the year.

Professor Johnson defended the real, genuine newspaper man against the many attacks that are sometimes made upon him, and insisted that the right sort of a man in this field is generally of the noblest, the most truthful, and the most generous type of manhood to be found anywhere.

"Every newspaper man," he said, "has placed over his desk, and has hammered, beaten, rammed, and beaten, beaten, beaten, rammed, hammered into his head the words 'truth and accuracy' every day of every week, in every year of his life in the work. He may lie in getting the news, or he may lie anywhere outside of the office, but in his writing for his newspaper he must be accurate, and he must be fair, and he must deal squarely if he wants to keep his job."

"We hear every day about the inaccuracy of newspaper reports, and of the mistakes made in newspaper articles. In every issue of a paper like the Indianapolis News, for example, there must be gathered, written up, corrected, and printed, outside of advertising, news to the amount of approximately 135,000 words, or about 1,000,000 letters. In getting every word of that news there are chances for errors in about fourteen different places. Why should a man Jones kick if he finds his name spelled 'Jones' when he stops to consider these figures? Should he not be glad that he found no more than one letter wrong? The wonder to me is that newspapers are made as accurate as they are."

"The time will not come within the next thirty years," he continued, "nor within the next 30 centuries when all newspapers or any of them will be made absolutely without mistakes. The man was never born who never made a mistake, and as long as newspapers are made by men we will find in them occasional errors."

Throughout his talk Professor Johnson gave evidence of a keen wit and a remarkably deep insight into human nature and into the problems which confront newspaper men every day and at every point. His satirical remarks about the injustice of many of the criticisms inflicted upon journalistic writers could not help but set his hearers to thinking.

Professor Johnson explained that the fascination which the newspaper man feels in his work was evidently because of the completeness of the control which it has over him, and because every day of his life he confronts new problems and experiences new sensations. Near the end of his talk he stated this very aptly: "A newspaper man may want to get married, or he may want to die, but if his paper has given him a 'story' to 'cover' he has no time for either. He must be 'ever on the job.'"

NEW YEAR'S GIFT TO BASKETBALL PLAYERS.

Sweater Jackets For Men on Christmas Trip.

Enough money was cleared on the Christmas basketball trip to enable the men, with a slight addition from their own pockets, to receive sweater jackets for the effort made. All those making the trip, including Coach Brown and Manager Riddick will receive the jackets.

ADVERTISE IT IN THE HERALD.

COACH BROWN WILL SUBMIT SCHEDULE OF THE GAMES TODAY.

GOOD MEN WILL TRY OUT

Every Class Captain Says His Bunch is the Best.

The various class captains are busy getting into shape for the schedule of inter-class basketball games which will begin at once. Coach Brown has a schedule in process of construction, which will be published tomorrow.

The teams as a whole will be exceptionally strong this season, and beyond a doubt will put up a quality of basketball that will interest every one. The games will be all the better because of the fact that Coach Brown will allow the varsity men to engage in them.

Seniors

Grady is captain of the Senior team, and said that he is going to have a team that will make them all sit up and take notice. Mercer, Lawrence, McGrew, and several others are out in suits and are looking good for the team.

Juniors

Captain Dewey of the Junior team seems to think that his team will deliver the goods. The Juniors seem to be taking a more lively interest in the thing than any of the other classes, and will no doubt send as strong a team onto the floor as will be seen in the inter-class games. Aside from Captain Dewey, Crouch, Power, Hawthorn, Hodler and several other men offer good material to work upon.

Sophomores

Gant is captain of the Sophomore team. In Summerville, Weaver, Moore, Duddy, Guthridge, Fiers, Captain Gant seems to have a good foundation to work on.

Freshmen

The Freshman basketball team showed up in great shape last class day. Dale, Letzler, Patton, Pierson, Guild and a number of other old high school stars all look good for some fast and furious playing.

RURAL FREE DELIVERY ON CAMPUS.

Boxes Placed for Benefit of Professors and Students

Rural Free Delivery, not by Uncle Sam, but by the University, was established at DePauw during the holidays. The system was put in for the convenience of faculty members and includes five routes with twenty-one boxes.

Now if a student cares to confess to or communicate with a professor upon any matter he drops a note into one of the aluminum-painted-official-looking - locked-with - a - key mail boxes that stand at attention at the entrances to the different buildings.

On Rural Route No. 1, that is, the row of boxes at the East entrance to East College, are Professors Weaver, Kern, Swahlen and Post. R. R. No. 2 at the West end of this building, includes Professors Gobin, Longdon, Caldwell, Stephenson and Gough.

On No. 3 in Minshall "Lab" are Professors Naylor, Blanchard, Laiten and Brown. Professors Banker, Seaman, North and Miss Matern are on Route 4 in Middle College. Over in West College is R. R. No. 5 giving service to Professors KleinSmith, Harris, Barnes and Coach Brown.

MAY MEET INDIANA MONDAY.

Basketball Game With Crimson is Probable.

It is all but sure that DePauw will meet Indiana Monday in basketball. The game will be played on the Opera House floor.

The Old Gold team will line up as follows: Forwards—Leazenby, Pierson. Centers—Martin, Walker. Guards—Hardin, Grady.

NOTHING WRONG WITH THE TEAM

SHORT-SIGHTED CRITICS ERR WHEN THEY WHINE AT XMAS SHOWING.

SOME STRONG TEAMS WERE MET

With Captain Crick Missing From Line-up Scores Were Close.

"What's the matter with the team?" is the question that our basketball team has had to face from various members of the student body as well as a few faculty members since their return from their Christmas trip. If a more unfair question could be asked, it would seem strange indeed.

As a matter of fact, there is nothing the matter with the team. The fact that they were the victors in only two of their seven games means absolutely nothing when the matter is turned over and looked at from the bottom as well as the surface. On the contrary the team did remarkably well. Every team that they met was a strong one. All of the up-state teams, in point of fact, are better than most college basketball teams in Indiana. The men who represent these association teams make basketball their business through the season. They play together most of the time and do good work.

Coach Brown is more than satisfied with the showing the men made on the trip. There can be no doubt about the thing. DePauw is going to have a basketball team that is right this season. Take the showing that they made against Rochester for an example. Vance, who is a Notre Dame star, and considered the best basketball player in the state, and Sprow, of Wabash fame, were both lined up against DePauw in this game. The first game resulted in a 38-39 score, and the second was not much worse. This shows as much as anything what the team can do.

The three freshmen forwards showed up remarkably well, but the absence of Captain Crick could not but be felt, and very keenly at that. Had Crick been with the squad, it is generally believed that several of the close scores would have been victories for DePauw.

So it seems, that after all, there is nothing at all the "matter with the team." The fact remains that the association teams that they met were too strong for them, and not that DePauw's men were too weak to win a game when they had a chance.

One day, after Eleanor had been subjected to rather severe disciplinary measures at the hands of her father, she called her mother into another room, closed the door significantly, and said: "Mother, I don't want to meddle in your business, but I wish you'd send that husband of yours back to Germany."

In Boston.

"Say, you four-eyed kid," exclaimed the alley urchin. "Well?"

"My dad is going to learn me how to box, and then I'll put it all over you."

"After your paternal parent has learned you how to box," responded little Waldo, "he might profitably expend some effort in learning you how to talk."

The Autocrat of the Auto.

"Bliggins worries me with his imperturbable assumption of superior wisdom." "Well," answered Mr. Chuggins, "he'll get over that. He's bought a motor car and a few haughty glances from the chauffeur will convince him that it is not his place to offer any suggestions."—Washington Star.

A Bit Discouraging.

A young man in Pratt said to the divine object of his adoration: "Do you think your father would object to your marrying me?" She replied: "I don't know. If he's anything like me he would."—Kansas City Star.

At the Matinee.

"I believe we had these same seats when we were at the theater last winter." "I think we had the two just in front."

"No; we had these seats. Here is my chewing gum."

More Trouble.

"What will happen when women vote?" "I suppose, among other things, one won't be able to get a Democratic cook to work with a Republican housemaid."

Why He Smoked.

"You ought to quit smoking, old man. You'll lose your appetite." "Well, it's cheaper to buy tobacco than grub, isn't it?"—Milwaukee Journal.

OBITUARY

All that true hearts and willing hands could do proved to be not enough to save the precious life of dear little Mabel Pauline, the sweet and loving child of George and Nannie McIntirey. She was taken sick with whooping cough about four weeks ago and died from pneumonia on last Wednesday morning at 9:45 o'clock. She was a bright and very beautiful child, loved by all and everyone who saw her, and we can console ourselves in one way only,
and that she was too good and sweet to bear the great trials of this life.
God called her to rest in Heaven.
She was born on Jan. 3rd, 1903, and died Dec. 29th, 1909. The many friends of the little one who is now gone forever extend their great sympathy to the heart broken parents and loving brother and sisters.

Cuba's tobacco production in 1909 manufactured and unmanufactured was of the value of $45,000,000 gold of which $11,000,000 worth was used for home consumption.

CLUB COLUMN

The regular meeting of the Bos-postponed. The date for the next meeting will be announced later.

Prevents the Deposition of Eggs in Partly Filled Sections.

If the brood apartment has been much contracted when the supers were added, the queen may go into the sections and deposit eggs unless prevented by the insertion of a queen excluder as shown in Illustration. This, merely a sheet of zinc with perforations which permit workers, but not the queen, to pass, is placed between the brood apartment and the supers. The great inconvenience of having brood in some of the sections is thereby prevented.

When the honey in the sections has been nearly capped over, the super may be lifted up and another added between it and the brood apartment. Or, should the strength of the colony not be sufficient, or the harvest not abundant enough to warrant the giving of so much space, the sections which are completely finished may be removed and the partly finished ones used as "bait sections" to encourage work in another set of sections on this hive or in new supers elsewhere. The objections to the removal of sections one by one, and brushing the bees from them, are (1) the time it takes;

and (2) the danger that the bees when disturbed, and especially if smoked, will bite open the capping and begin the removal of the honey, thus injuring the appearance of the completed sections.

Prevention of Swarming.

The most commonly practiced and easily applied preventive measure is that of giving abundant room for storage of honey, says the Agricultural Bulletin. This to be effective should be given early in the season, before the bees get fairly into the swarming notion, and the honey should be removed frequently, unless additional empty combs can be given in the case of colonies managed for extracted honey, while those storing in sections should be given additional supers before those already on are completed. With colonies run for comb honey it is not so easy to keep down swarming as in those run for extracted honey and kept supplied with empty comb.
Free ventilation and shading of the hives as soon as warm days come will also tend toward prevention.
Opening the hives once or twice weekly and destroying all queen cells that have been commenced will check swarming for a time in many instances, and is a plan which seems very thorough and the most plausible of any to beginners. But sometimes swarms issue without waiting to form cells; it is also very difficult to find all cells without shaking the bees from each comb in succession, an operation which, besides consuming much time, is very laborious when supers have to be removed, and greatly disturbs the labors of the bees. If but one cell is overlooked the colony will still swarm.
The plan therefore leaves at best much to be desired, and is in general not worth the effort it cost and can not be depended on.
